His new novel, "Harvard Square," opens with a prologue set in the present day as the narrator guides his unimpressed teenage son around the campus on a college visit. "Everything he sees," Aciman writes, "seems steeped in a stagnant vat of Longing pulses through all of André Aciman's books — from his celebrated memoir, "Out of Egypt," to his most recent novel, "Eight White Nights."

André Aciman has a reputation for writing length and complex novels about human relationships and Harvard Square lives up to its promise. I have rarely been so impressed by the creation of a character as that of Kalaj, an Arab taxi driver caught in a limbo of displacement from his home country and awaiting a green card to allow him to stay in America.

Harvard Square is the elegant and sexually charged story of a young émigré grad student, a Jew from Egypt, who meets a brash, magnetic Arab taxi driver—and how their friendship tests his loyalties and throws his life in America into doubt. André Aciman's writing has been hailed by Colm Tóibín as "fiction at its most supremely interesting," and here Aciman delivers a powerful tale of identity and the wages of assimilation.
