What Carver "hit on" and what "it stands for" will be explored in this essay, which argues that the peacock (and its feathers) offers complex and contradictory symbolism of both transcendence (going beyond the mundane and predictable) 1 and of vanity or narcissism (being self-absorbed). This symbolism of peacock feathers informs, then, our understanding of the relationship between the central couple in the story, Jack and Fran, whose initial, liminal state of "waiting" could ...

He remembers fondly but painfully that night, when before they left, Olla gave Fran some peacock feathers and how Fran kept her hand on his leg during their drive home. Analysis. This story masterfully illustrates one of Raymond Carver's great gifts - the ability to suggest profundity not through what is said, but through what is unsaid. Like many of his narrators, Jack speaks of a moment full of meaning and import, one that he continues to return to in his memory in hopes of understanding it.

FEATHERS out and looked about twice the size it'd been when it landed. "Goddamn," 1 said again. we stayed where we in the front seat. The bird moved forward a little. Then it turned its head to the side and braced itself. It kept its bright, wild eye right on us. Its tail was raised, and it was like a big fan folding in and out.

Short Story Review: "Feathers" by Raymond Carver

While silence is an important motif found in many of the stories in Cathedral, in "Feathers," understanding characters' silences is crucial for interpretation, especially for understanding the seemingly perplexed ending of the story.

Early life, 1938 - 1958. Carver was born in Clatskanie, Oregon, a mill town on the Columbia River, and grew up in Yakima, Washington, the son of Ella Beatrice (née Casey) and Cleve Raymond Carver. His father, a sawmill worker from Arkansas, was a fisherman and heavy drinker. Carver's mother worked on and off as a waitress and a retail clerk. His brother, James Franklin Carver, was born in 1943.

As with "Feathers," the story is told in past tense. Edna remembers a summer when Wes rented a furnished house in Eureka (presumably in the Pacific Northwest) from another recovering alcoholic named Chef. Wes calls Edna, from whom he was estranged at the time, and invites her to live with him during the summer.
