Kathy Watson gives a remarkable insight into the world of a driven Victorian man of action who championed the very practice of swimming at a time when it was hardly deemed a sport. She captures the idiosyncracies of the small swimming community against the power of the sea to dominate a man's life ultimately leading to his early and tragic death.

The Crossing: The Glorious Tragedy of the First Man to ...

SIDELIGHTS: Author and journalist Kathy Watson's first book, The Crossing: The Glorious Tragedy of the First Man to Swim the English Channel, is a biography about swimmer Matthew Webb, the twenty-seven year old who in August of 1875 was the first person to successfully make the swim from Dover, England, to Calais, France. Watson chronicles both the swim and its aftermath, describing how Webb, a ship's captain, failed to realize the effect his newfound fame would have on his life.
